

THE BOUDOIR ACCELERATOR COURSE

By: Michael Sasser

1

WELCOME

Thank you for investing in me and investing in yourself! If you are reading this, you believe in the power of boudoir. It is an amazing experience and I'm glad that you want to share it.

If you are having trouble getting clients, building your portfolio, or are looking to improve the quality of your work, then enjoy this book!

Welcome Section

Hello! I'm Michael Sasser, your boudoir photography teacher for the remainder of this course. Nice to meet you.

I'm looking forward to sharing with you some obvious ways to improve your business, and some ways that are less obvious. I am an open book, so if something in the course wasn't answered for you, send me an email and I'll do what I can to answer!

The videos in this course are full of business talk, posing, shooting, pricing, hair and makeup and more. But before we get to that, let's talk about what to do way before a client even emails you.

TRUST

I believe that a lot of what makes clients feel comfortable to book you is trust. This can come in many different forms. Trust that you are a professional, trust that you won't share these pictures without permission, trust that you will make them look amazing in their pictures, and many more other things.

This next section is going to explore many of the ways you can build trust through both your website and referrals. Let's get into it.

Referrals:

A Referral is the ultimate trust. If a woman was photographed by you, and it was an amazing experience, and they rave to their friends that they HAVE to do it!... then there is little room for doubt. So set up a great referral program for your clients with big incentives, especially when starting out. The best one I've seen is Kara Marie's Book Her Friends Guide, I used this system and it worked well. Now that I do same day sales sessions, I've had to change it up. Definitely worth the money.

YOUR WEBSITE

Use Video Everywhere You Can

If you don't have a behind the scenes video on your website yet, get one right now. I have another course on shooting video. For buying this course I'll give you $50 off to help you get started. Send me an email to michael@michaelsasser.com and I will send you the discount.

Before I started shooting boudoir full time I was shooting wedding films. Now I use video with my boudoir company any chance I get. Showing behind the scenes of what a shoot is like and recording testimonials of women and their experience can be extremely powerful.

Women typically have no idea what they are walking into when they sign up for a boudoir shoot. Video can 'demystify' what your client's experience will be like. Show them that you are professional in your coaching and confident in your posing skills. Show them that it will be a fun experience. Show them that OTHER women loved having the experience. People are very visual, and the idea of being naked in a room with essentially a stranger can make their imagination wander, unless you SHOW them the reality. You can film some yourself, but don't be afraid to hire someone to come film if necessary. Bottom line, SHOWING is better than telling.

My entire page of videos for my perspective clients to watch.

Reviews

Reviews are one of the biggest ways to build trust with your future clients. Video reviews are amazing, and covered in my boudoir video course, but I get bookings from Yelp! Clients say the reviews really made them excited to email and book with me. Yelp! isn't a magic bullet, but it has been a good source of leads. The problem is... How do you get clients to write reviews, especially if you have only photographed a few people and they have been spread out over the last few months, maybe years.

CONTEST: About every 6 months I hold a mini contest for a complimentary shoot, a metal print, or a spa day, depending on how long ago I photographed those clients. To enter they must write a review on Yelp! or Google, or copy and paste them to both. To make this REALLY easy, I've set up shortened links to my yelp and google pages using tiny.cc to go right to the site with the review button clicked already. The easier it is for your clients to write a review, the more likely they will be to do it. Also, don't be afraid to ask your clients for a review the day after you photograph them. The experience is fresh in their mind and they will be more likely to do it.

Use a Photo of Yourself

A lot of photographers don't like to have their own photos on their website. It is important to take away the 'mystery' of who their photographer will be, and having a picture on your About Me page is a great way to do that. It will also help build an emotional connection between you two, and we all know emotion equals sales!

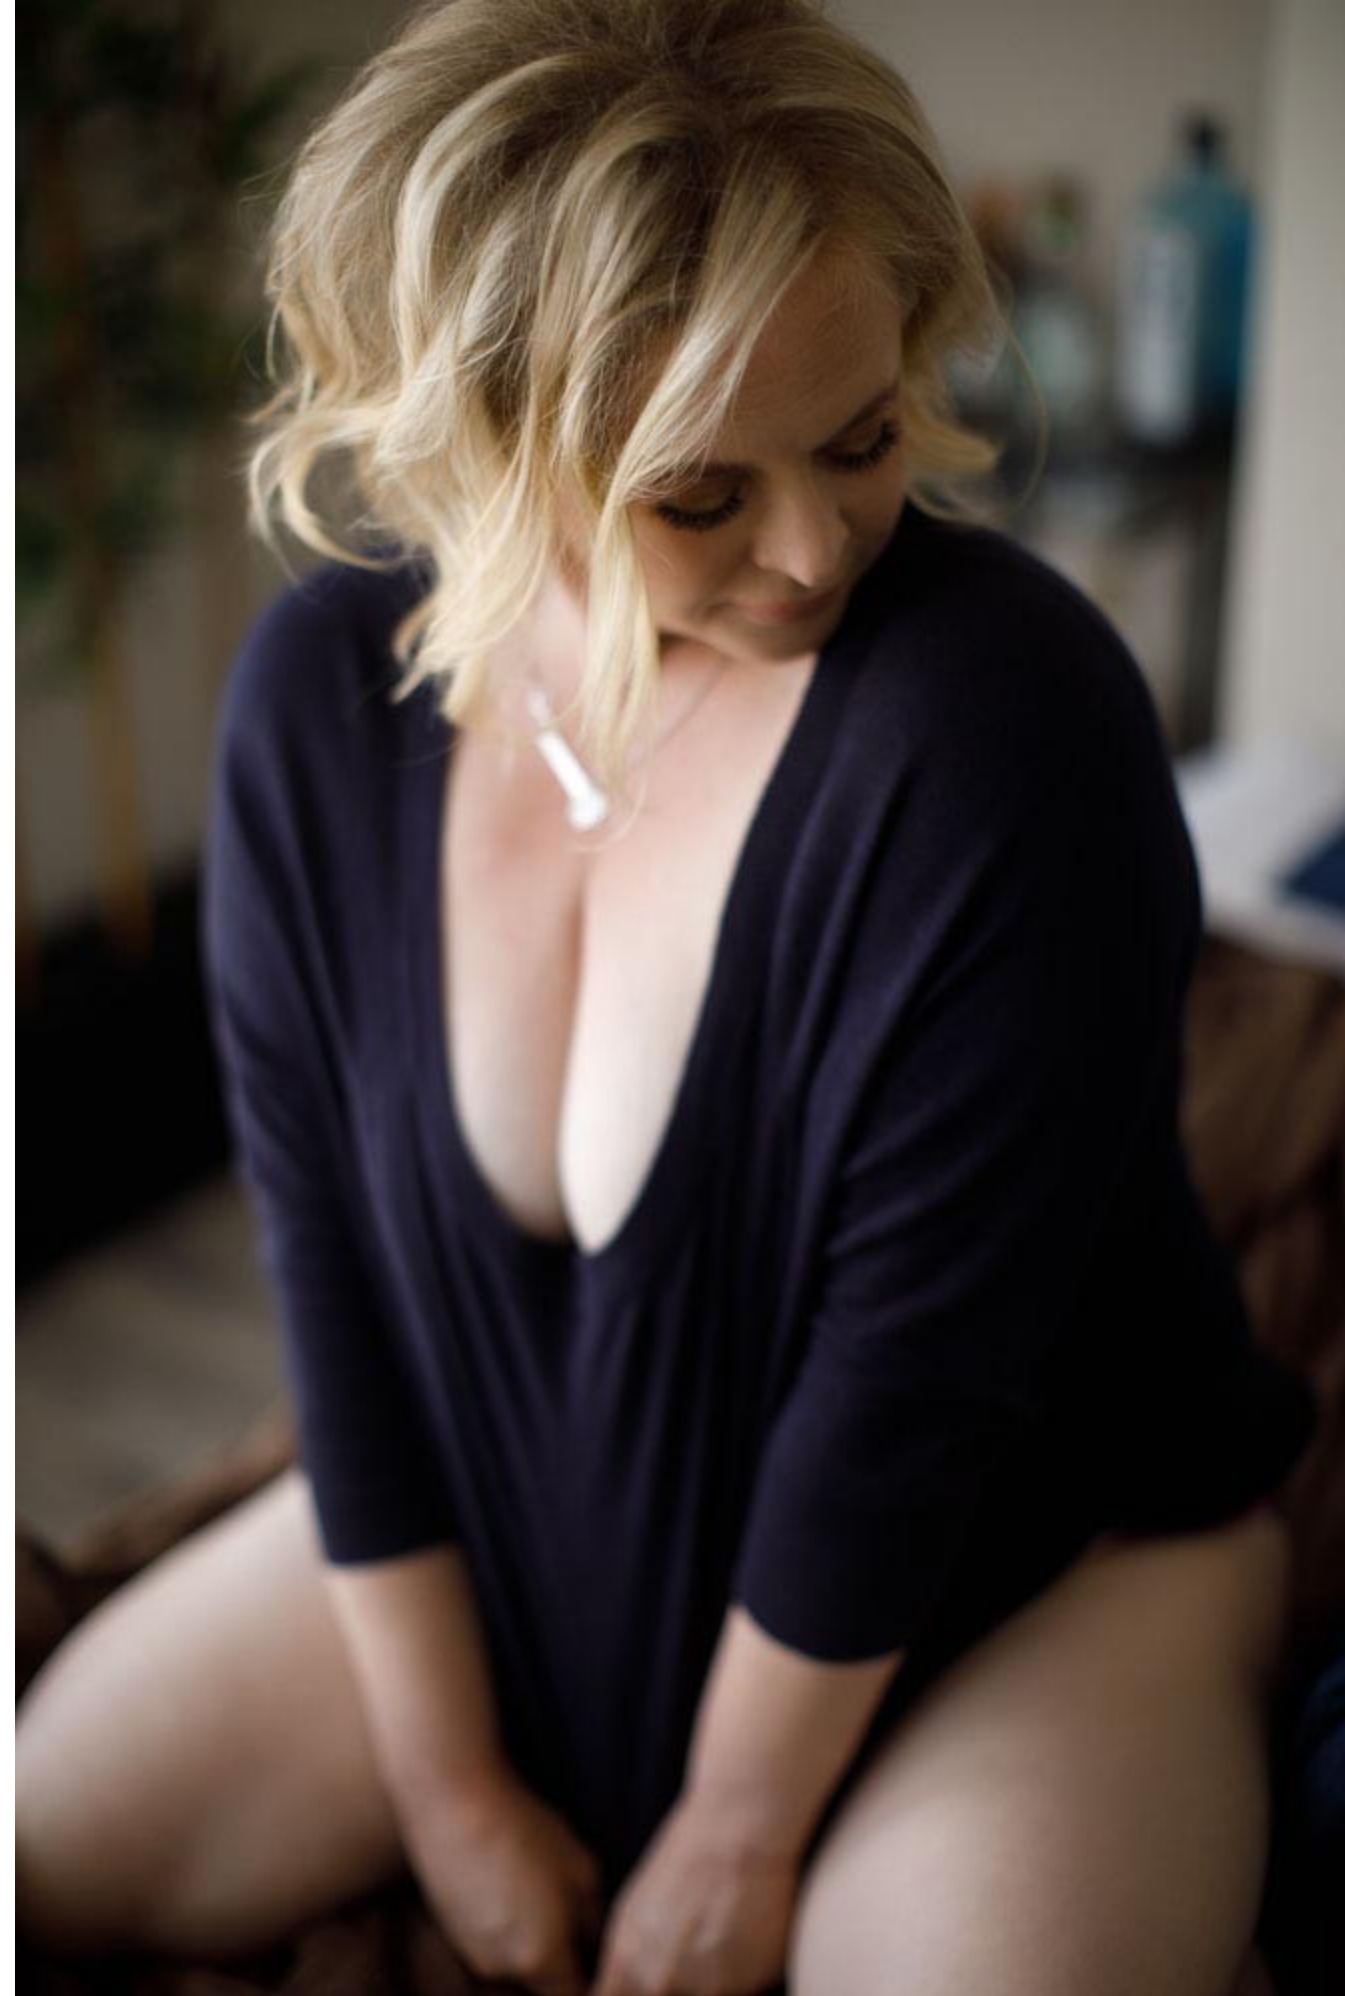

Show only your best work

It can be tempting at first to put in every picture you have, but it is better to show fewer quality images, than many average ones. I know that in the beginning you don't have that much work to share. So how do we put out our best work when our current clients won't let us share their pictures?!

Shoot models.

When I decided to add boudoir to my photography business, I had only photographed boudoir once, and had a few from a workshop. The very next week I scheduled 6 boudoir shoots of old friends, friends of friends, and models I messaged on Model Mayhem, all with the understanding that this would be a trade shoot. I would get to share the images and they would receive the digitals in return. All of the sudden I had 7 shoots to share, lots of women to put on my website and blog about, and it looked like I had been in business for a few months. While it can be fun to shoot the thinnest hottest woman you can find, your future clients will identify with someone with a more average body type and are more likely to imagine themselves in those pictures. Variety is key.

Model Mayhem is so 2012. Today you might look on Instagram or join a facebook group in your city titled "Model/Photographer/Makeup Artist" or something like that. Everyone there is looking to collaborate.

BOOKING WITHOUT A PORTFOLIO

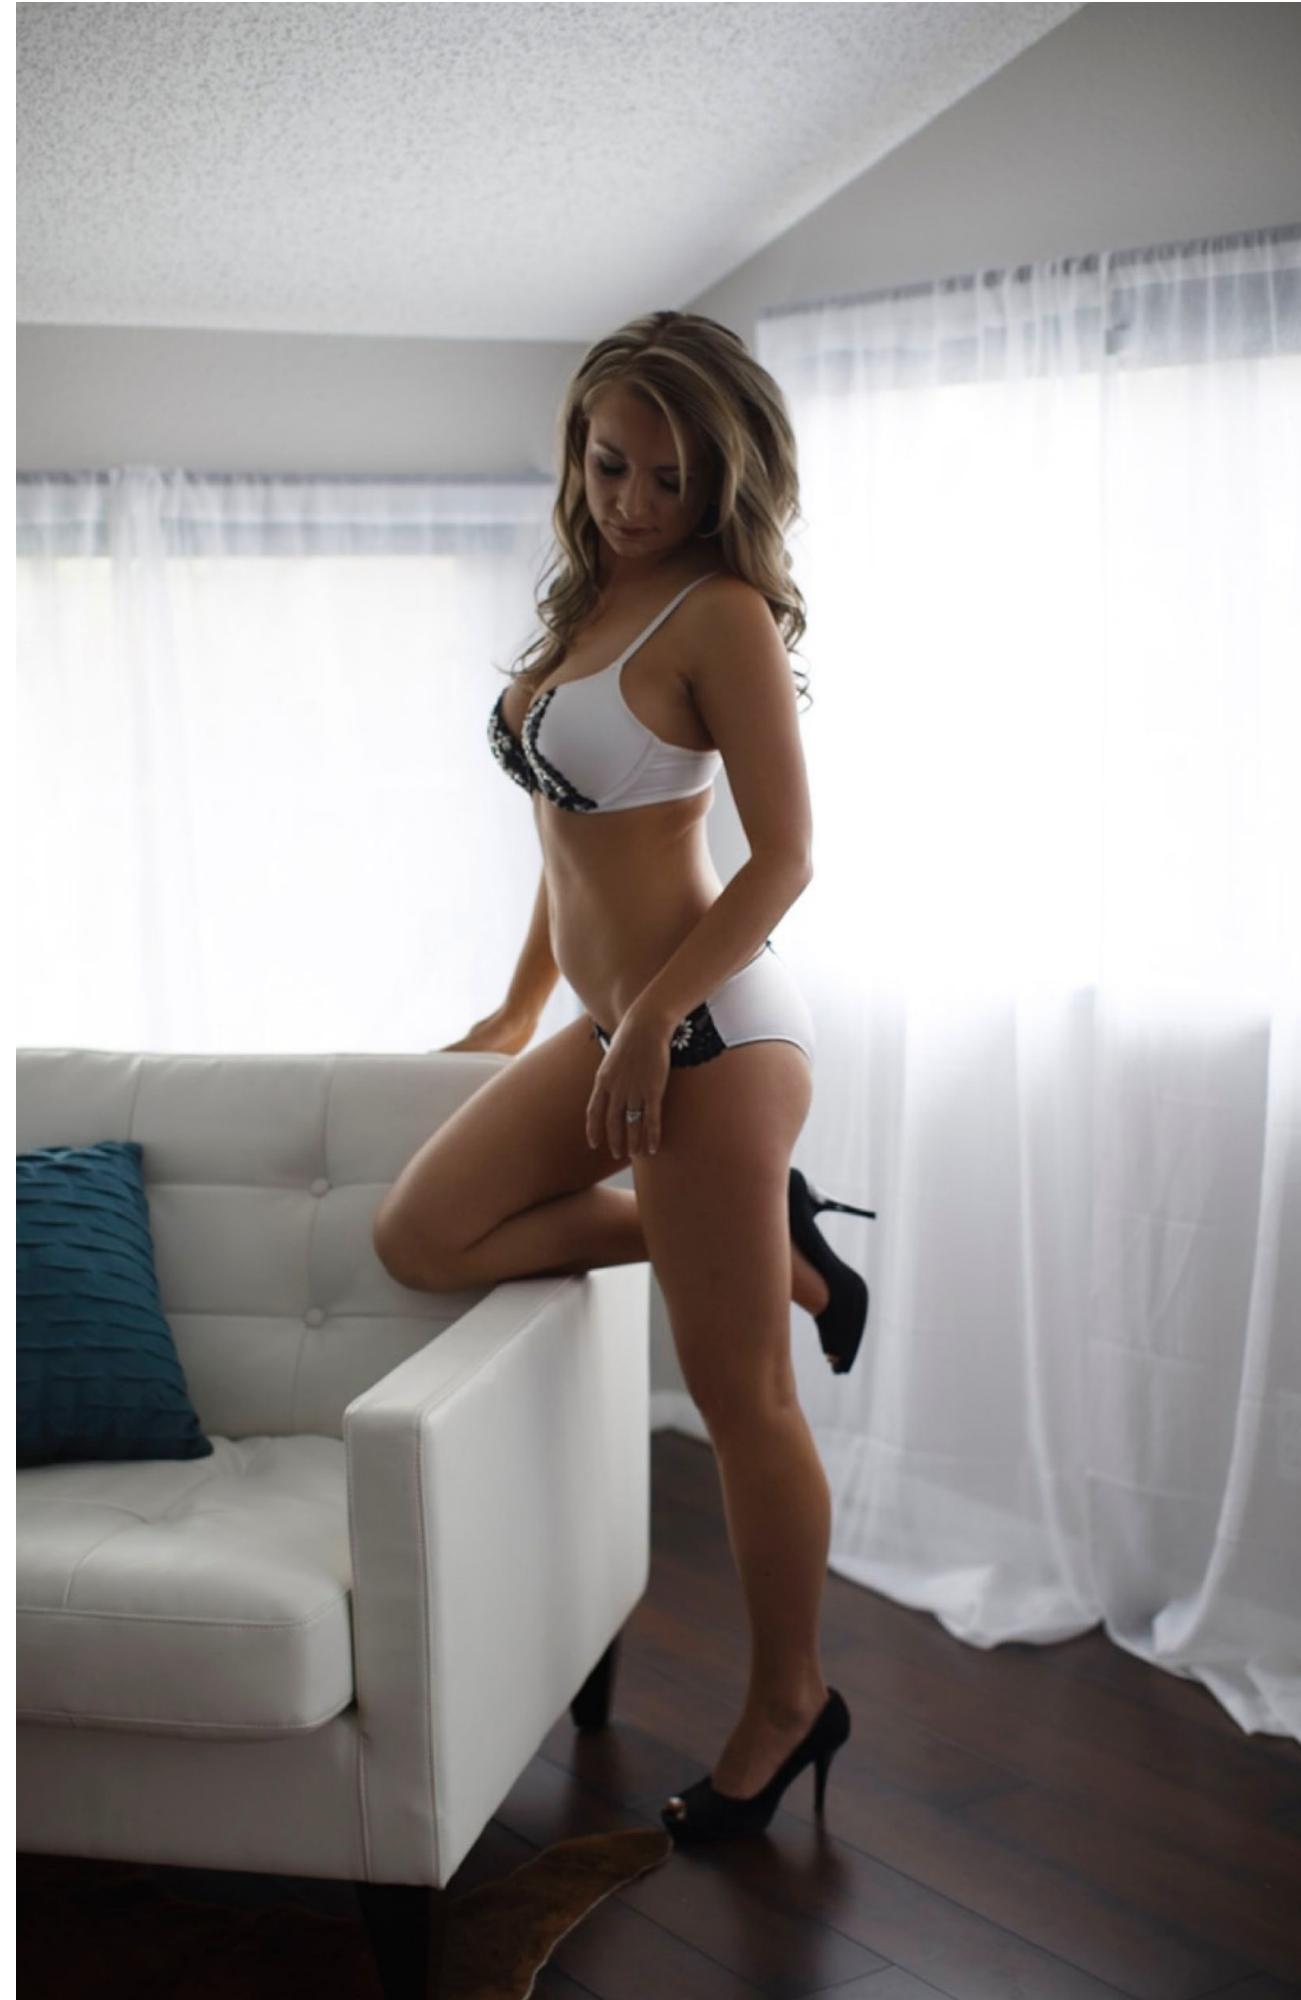

"But I messaged a few women saying I needed images for my website and that I would shoot them for free and they said no!"

From her point of view, you need something from them, and seem desperate! Let's change the conversation.

"Hey Miss B, I've started my boudoir business and am introducing pricing of XXXXX starting May 10th. I'm only doing 3 shoots (you can say 3 but do as many as you like, the point is to add scarcity) before then in order to start a referral base and give a few women a chance to get in before my prices go up! I'm taking applications right now. I need you to fill it out with your name and why you want to have a boudoir experience! I'll be choosing in 5 days."

From this point of view, your models better act quickly on this amazing opportunity to be one of the "It" women who get a complimentary shoot that is really worth XXXXXXXX.

Make sure you get model releases signed BEFORE the shoot. Something simple will work great. I just have them check a box that says "Use anything, I trust you." And have them sign it. I do it in 17Hats but even a print out would be fine.

WHY DO YOU SHOOT BOUDOIR?

People don't buy what you do. They buy why you do it.

- Simon Sinek

Talk about why you shoot boudoir.

This goes for any photographer and for every genre of photography. When women research your website to find if you are just another “person with a camera” or a true boudoir photographer, they will want to know why you decided to start this business.

Only you truly know why.

Spend some time and write it out. Take notes from your own conversations when other people ask you. Boudoir for me means something so different than it did a year ago, and it was even further from that when I first started. For a lot of us this changes over time. As it changes, update your website to reflect it. It will grow more and more authentic and women will connect to it in a more powerful way the clearer you can share your reasons.

Another way to think of it is, “Your clients believe what you believe.” So what do you believe about boudoir, that your clients will agree with, or relate to?

Michael,

Just had to write a little Thank you note. What an INCREDIBLE experience and exciting ride yesterday was! Thank you Thank you from the bottom of my heart! I can't stop thinking about it all and I am anxiously looking forward to the opportunity to see the end result of your work. You are SO TALENTED and SO GIFTED and I'm so GRATEFUL to have crossed paths. "THANK YOU" just doesn't seem to do it justice.

Mrs. J

WHY DO YOU SHOOT BOUDOIR?

Testimonials aren't just a way for clients to rave about you as a photographer.

Testimonials connect with the fears and hesitations of potential clients.

Women need to hear that other women were unsure about the same thing, but after having the experience their only regret was not having a session sooner!

Instruct your past clients to write a review addressing what they were nervous about (could be pricing, could be not knowing how to pose, in my case being a male photographer), and if/how that changed. Here is an example:

"Although I was immediately taken by the images I saw and blog posts (ummm did I say gorgeous?), my obvious hesitation was would I feel comfortable with a male photographer? I never imagined hiring a male boudoir photographer. I decided to take the initial risk and sent an email inquiring about his packages. He made me feel at ease during that first meeting and made every effort to listen and understand what I was looking for. Any doubts I had quickly disappeared...I left feeling comfortable around him, confident that he was the right choice!" - Mrs. K

Include a photo from that client's session next to the review so women can connect it to a real person.

Video testimonials can also be great for your website, and don't be

Michael,

OH MY GOSH! SPEECHLESS! I love them! I cannot thank you enough for the AMAZING boudoir shoot. You definitely opened my eyes to my own self and BEAUTY!

Miss J

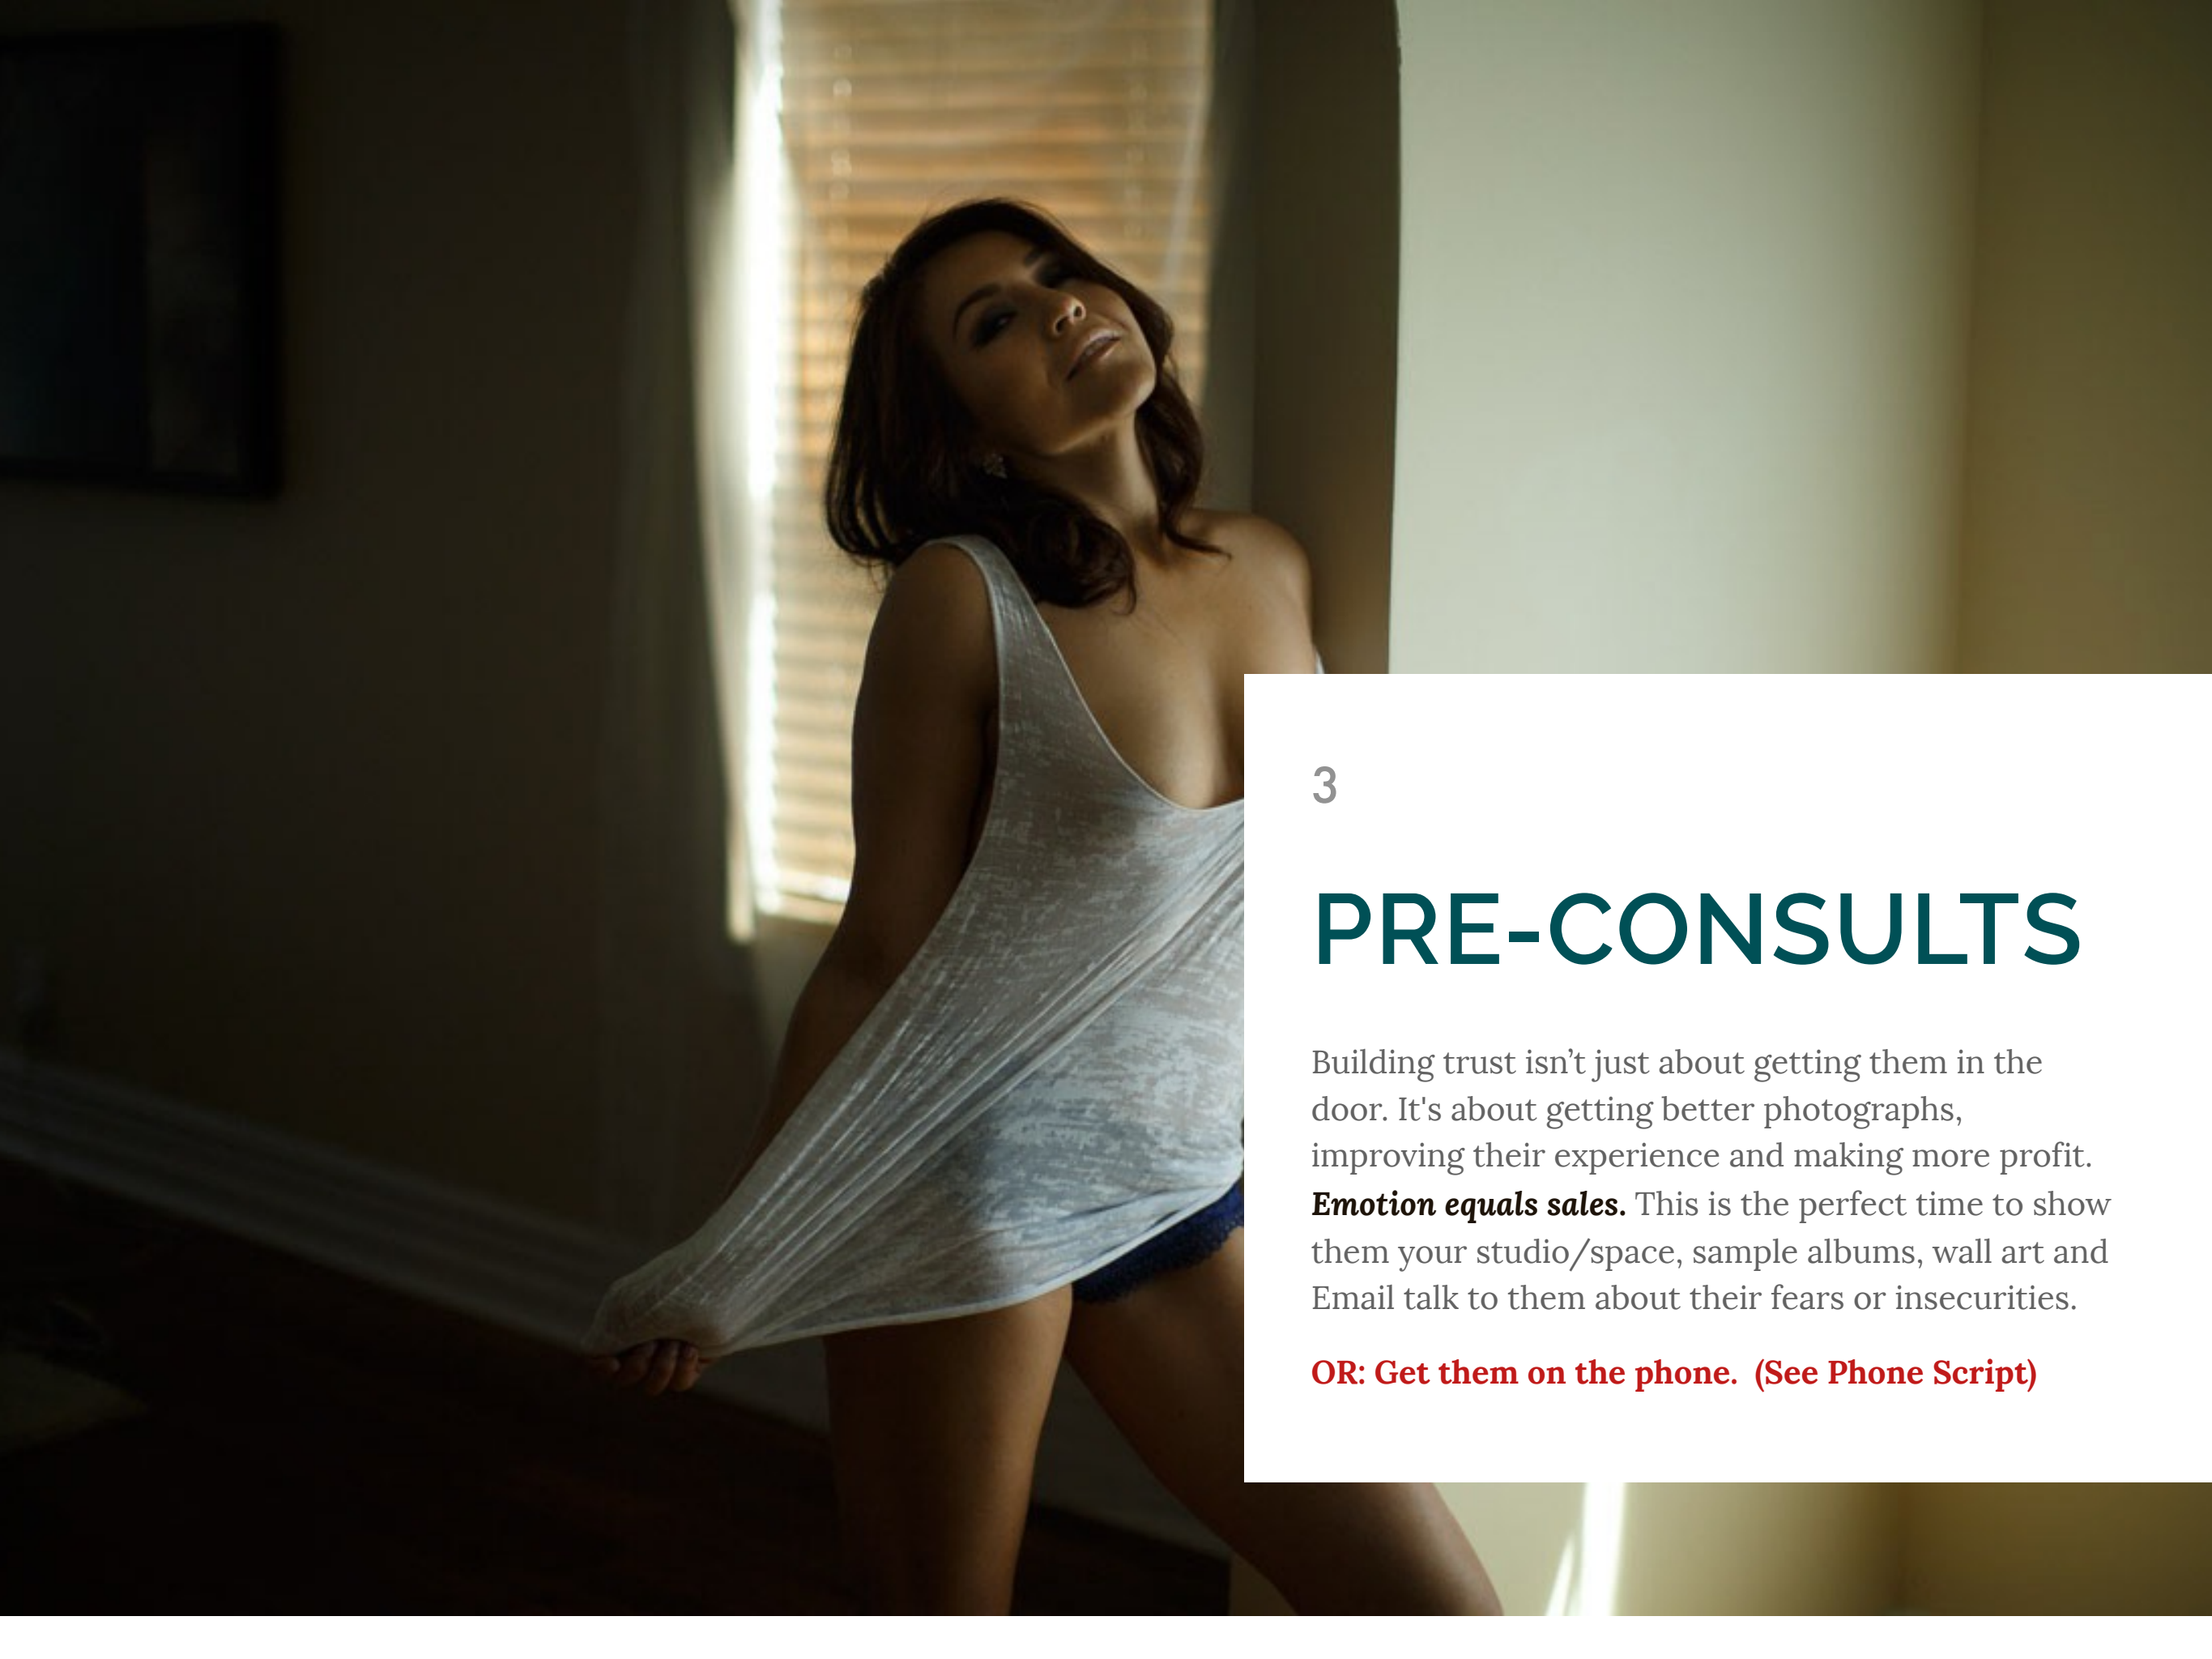

MORE TRUST

Join a Boudoir Association

There are two of these groups that have really propelled my business forward. Simply what you gain in knowledge is worth it. Not only are there amazing boudoir professionals who can help answer questions whenever you need, but they give you a member's badge to place on your website. Again this lets clients know that you are a professional, and not a fly-by-night business.

- AIBP \(Association of International Boudoir Photographers\)
- Professional Photographers of America

3

PRE-CONSULTS

Building trust isn't just about getting them in the door. It's about getting better photographs, improving their experience and making more profit. Emotion equals sales. This is the perfect time to show them your studio/space, sample albums, wall art and Email talk to them about their fears or insecurities.

OR: Get them on the phone. (See Phone Script)

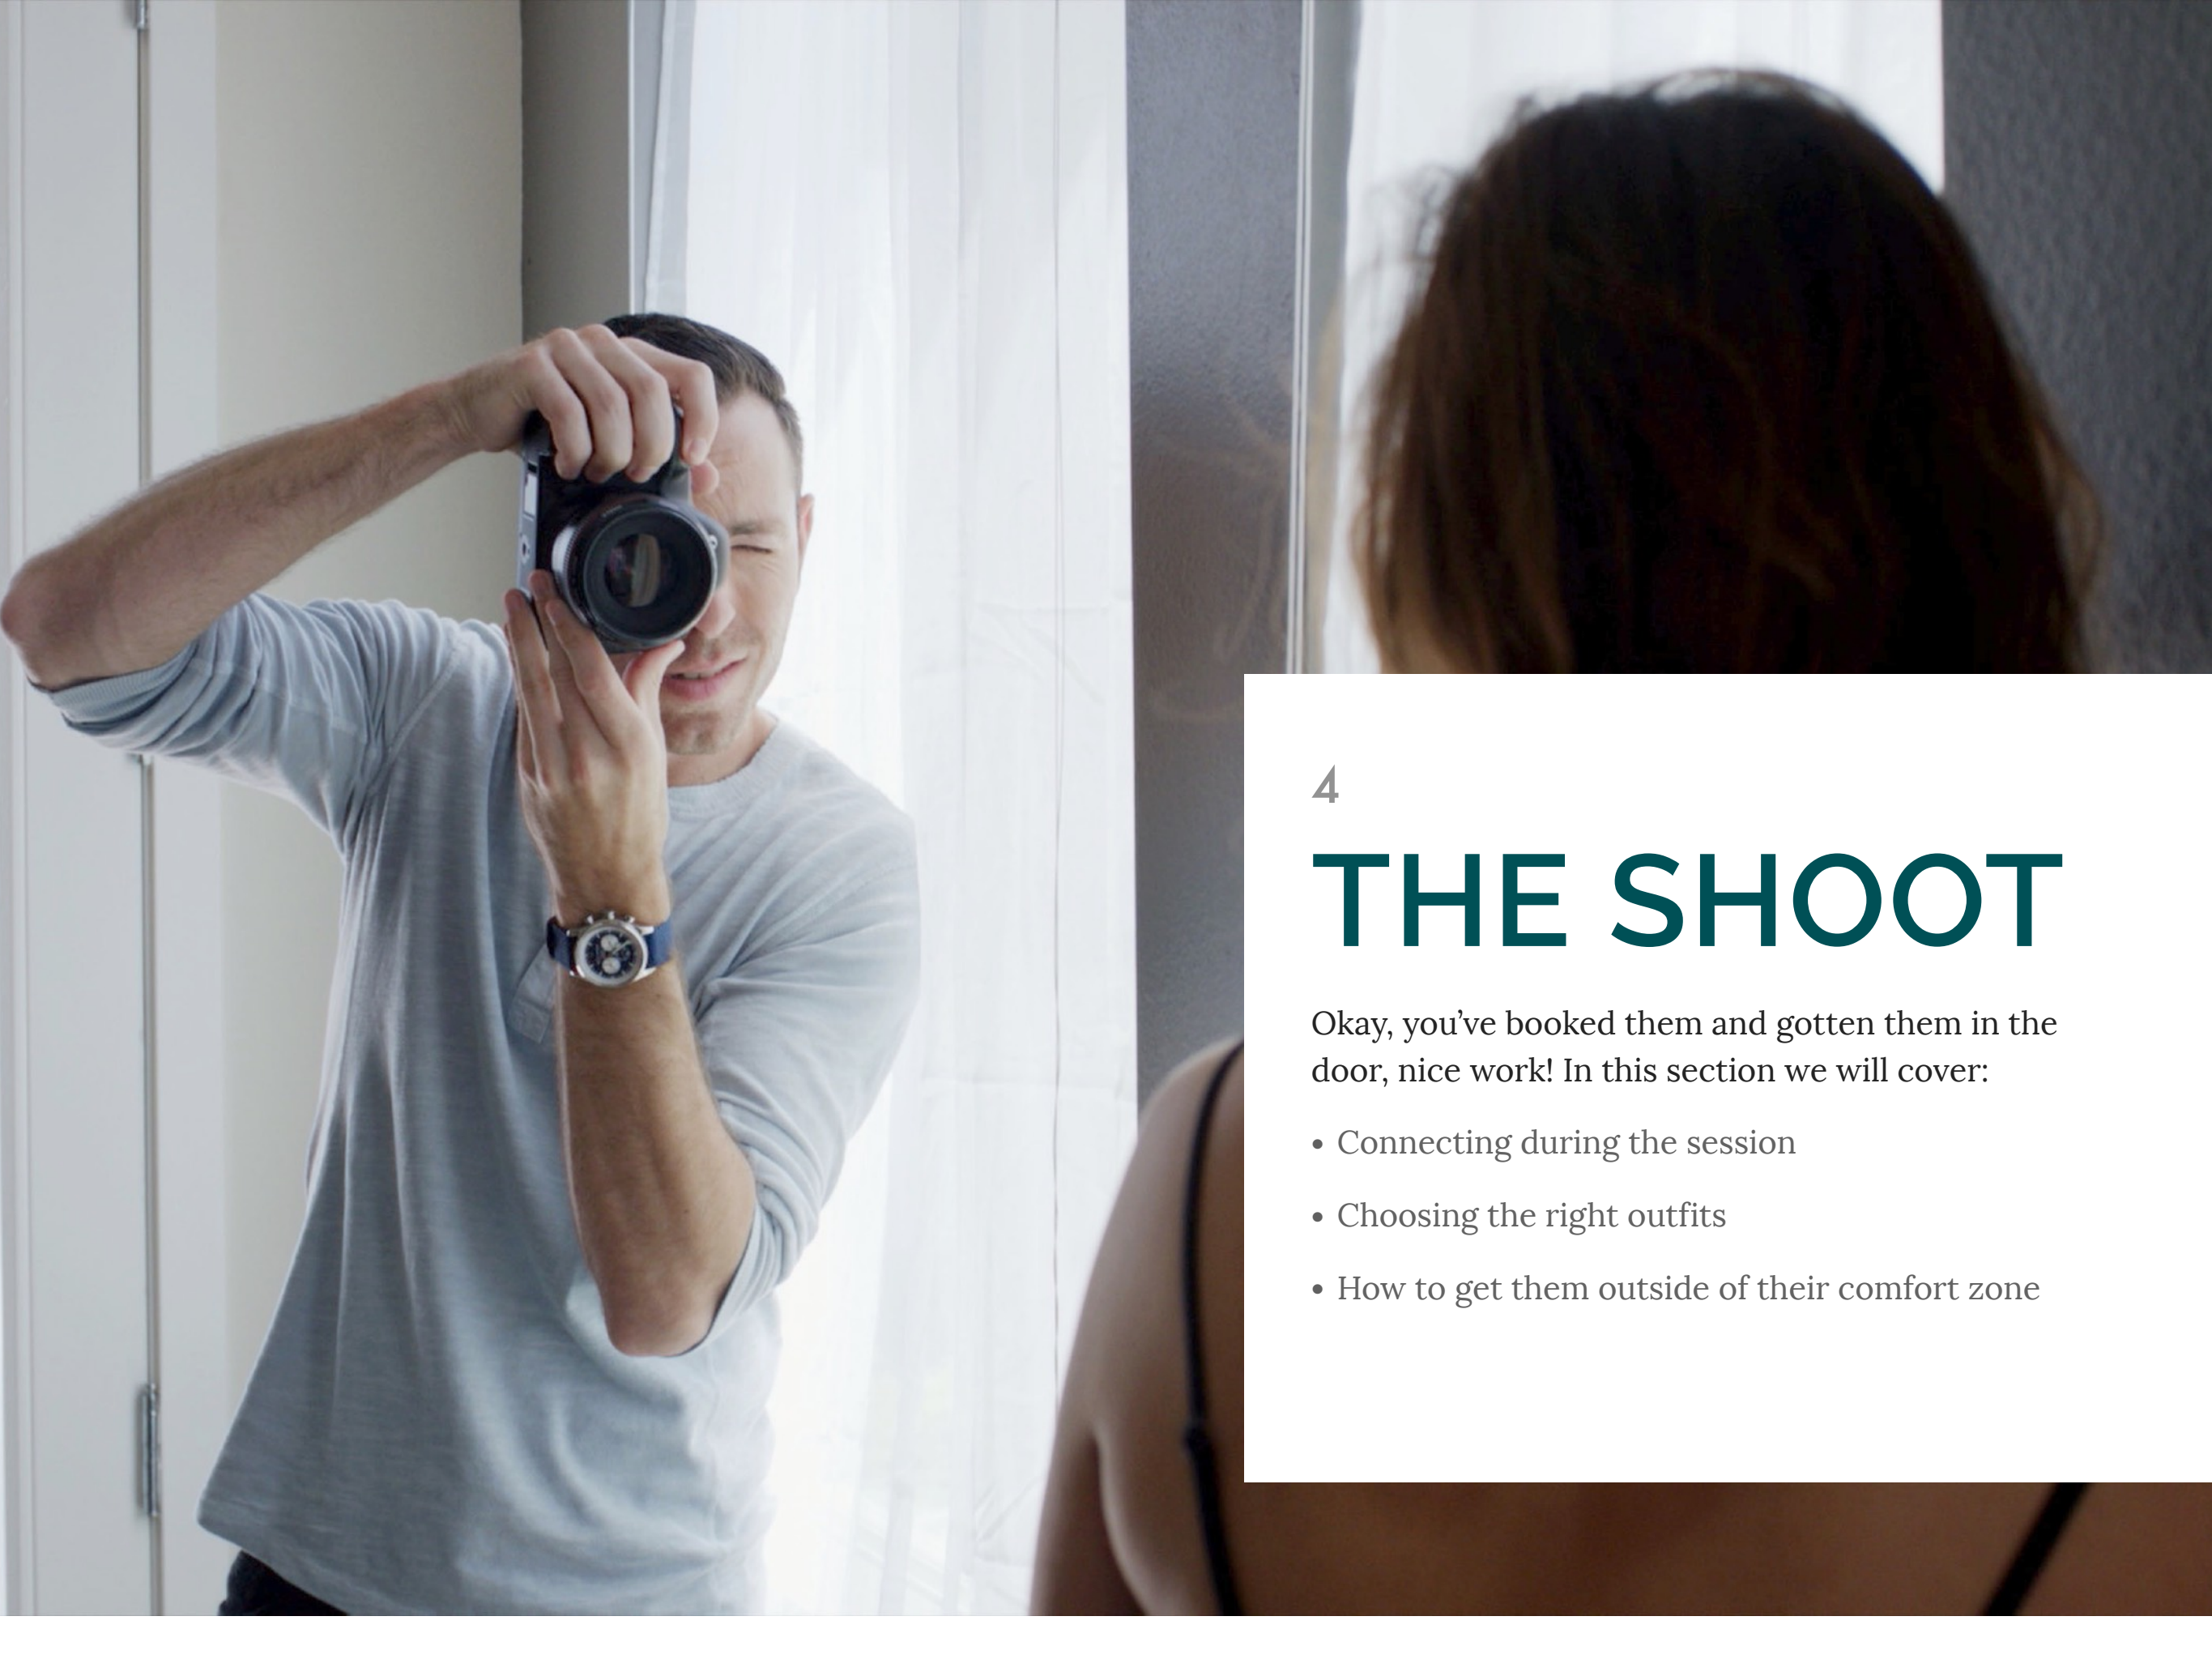

A woman with long brown hair is looking out of a window. Her hands are behind her head, and she appears to be in a state of contemplation or stress. The view outside the window shows a blurred green landscape and a building in the background.

They Emailed You... Now What?

Get Them On The Phone

I now have my clients on a waitlist system, but the main goal of any inquiry is to get them on the phone. It's easier to close them once you get on the phone and all of that information is detailed in the Phone Script Download.

It has the email I respond with to their inquiry and the exact words I use to book them over the phone, go download it now!

4

THE SHOOT

Okay, you've booked them and gotten them in the door, nice work! In this section we will cover:

- Connecting during the session
- Choosing the right outfits
- How to get them outside of their comfort zone

HAIR AND MAKEUP

Offer your hair and makeup artist a free shoot. They are not only a huge source for referrals, they will be spending an hour to an hour and a half with your client before the shoot. Having a makeup artist who can say...

“Girl, you are going to have so much fun. Everyone is nervous at first, but you will feel SO sexy. When I did mine, I couldn’t even think straight I was so nervous, but Michael is the best that I have found in this city and you are in great hands. As soon as you see that first pictures on the back of his camera you will be like... ‘Lets do this thing!’ I’m jealous you get to stick around and get naked!”

This is mellow for one of my makeup artists. She is lively and funny and does most of the work for me to get women comfortable to shoot.

I stick around for a decent amount of their hair and makeup, asking them questions about their upcoming wedding, anniversary, or anything else relating to why they are having a boudoir experience. Then I relate it to other clients I’ve had.

We talk about funny stories I’ve had at the studio, or things that are really only appropriate in a small group of close friends that get them comfortable quickly. Examples would be:

- What do your friends think about you doing a shoot like this? (This also suggests she talk to her friends about it more, which could lead to referrals.)

- If she has any trips coming up. It's easy small talk and helps get things awesome.

- We laugh about how if my grandma did something like this when she was younger and I saw it I would be like "Damn Grandma! This is awesome!"

- Anything to get them comfortable with the idea that you are used to this kind of scenario, and you don't find anything that is happening inappropriate.

PICKING OUTFITS

Remember the trust we created earlier by letting them know we photograph boudoir ALL the time? It carries over here.

In this situation, your client wants to be told what they look good wearing. They want to know your opinion. Especially the opinion of a guy.

Tell them which of their outfits are your favorite and why. Don't lie. Be honest.

- I love this bright red, it is going to look AMAZING for your skin tone.

- We are definitely going to start in this loose tank top. They are underrated, there is something so sexy about wearing something loose and casual.
- Normally I don't love blue, but it will go perfectly with your red hair.

When you take control, they will trust you to lead them through the process.

Order of Outfits

Everyone does this differently. I love tank tops and off the shoulder sweaters. Not just because I find them sexy, but because they are a great way for clients to ease into the experience. More of their body is covered so they are more comfortable AND the loose material gives their hands something to play with. They can pull the sweater off their shoulder, pull it down, pull it up or cross their arms like they are about to take it off. As an added bonus they aren't focusing on making a specific facial expression which leads to more natural looks.

Next I usually move to lingerie or a body suit. I'll photograph my favorite outfit last or second to last.

About 70% of clients end up doing shot where they are nude, either holding sheets or laying on the floor. More on this topic in my 'Double Your Poses' Course \(25% off here\). Some won't be comfortable in a picture if even their bra is unclasped. Everyone is different.

Pro Tip: If she brought a friend, show them as well, especially if your client is not very confident. Hearing it from someone else will boost their confidence.

SHOWING PICTURES ON THE BACK OF THE CAMERA

Their hair and makeup is done, they have their first outfit on, they come out and you tell them “Wow! You look amazing!”

The beginning of the shoot is about two things. Getting their confidence high, and showing her that she has nothing to worry about; these pictures will be amazing. I start in pretty much the same place every time. A nice shot of their face with a good expression, good light and nothing too sexy.

To show the picture or not to show the picture...

There are two trains of thought here. Don't show them any images because:

1. If they love an image they see on your camera that you decide not to include in the final edits, they will ask about that picture.
2. If she doesn't like it her confidence will shrink.
3. It takes away from the excitement of seeing them for the first time at the reveal.

These are all valid reasons, and you can choose what you prefer.

I personally show them a photo from the very first set on back of the camera because:

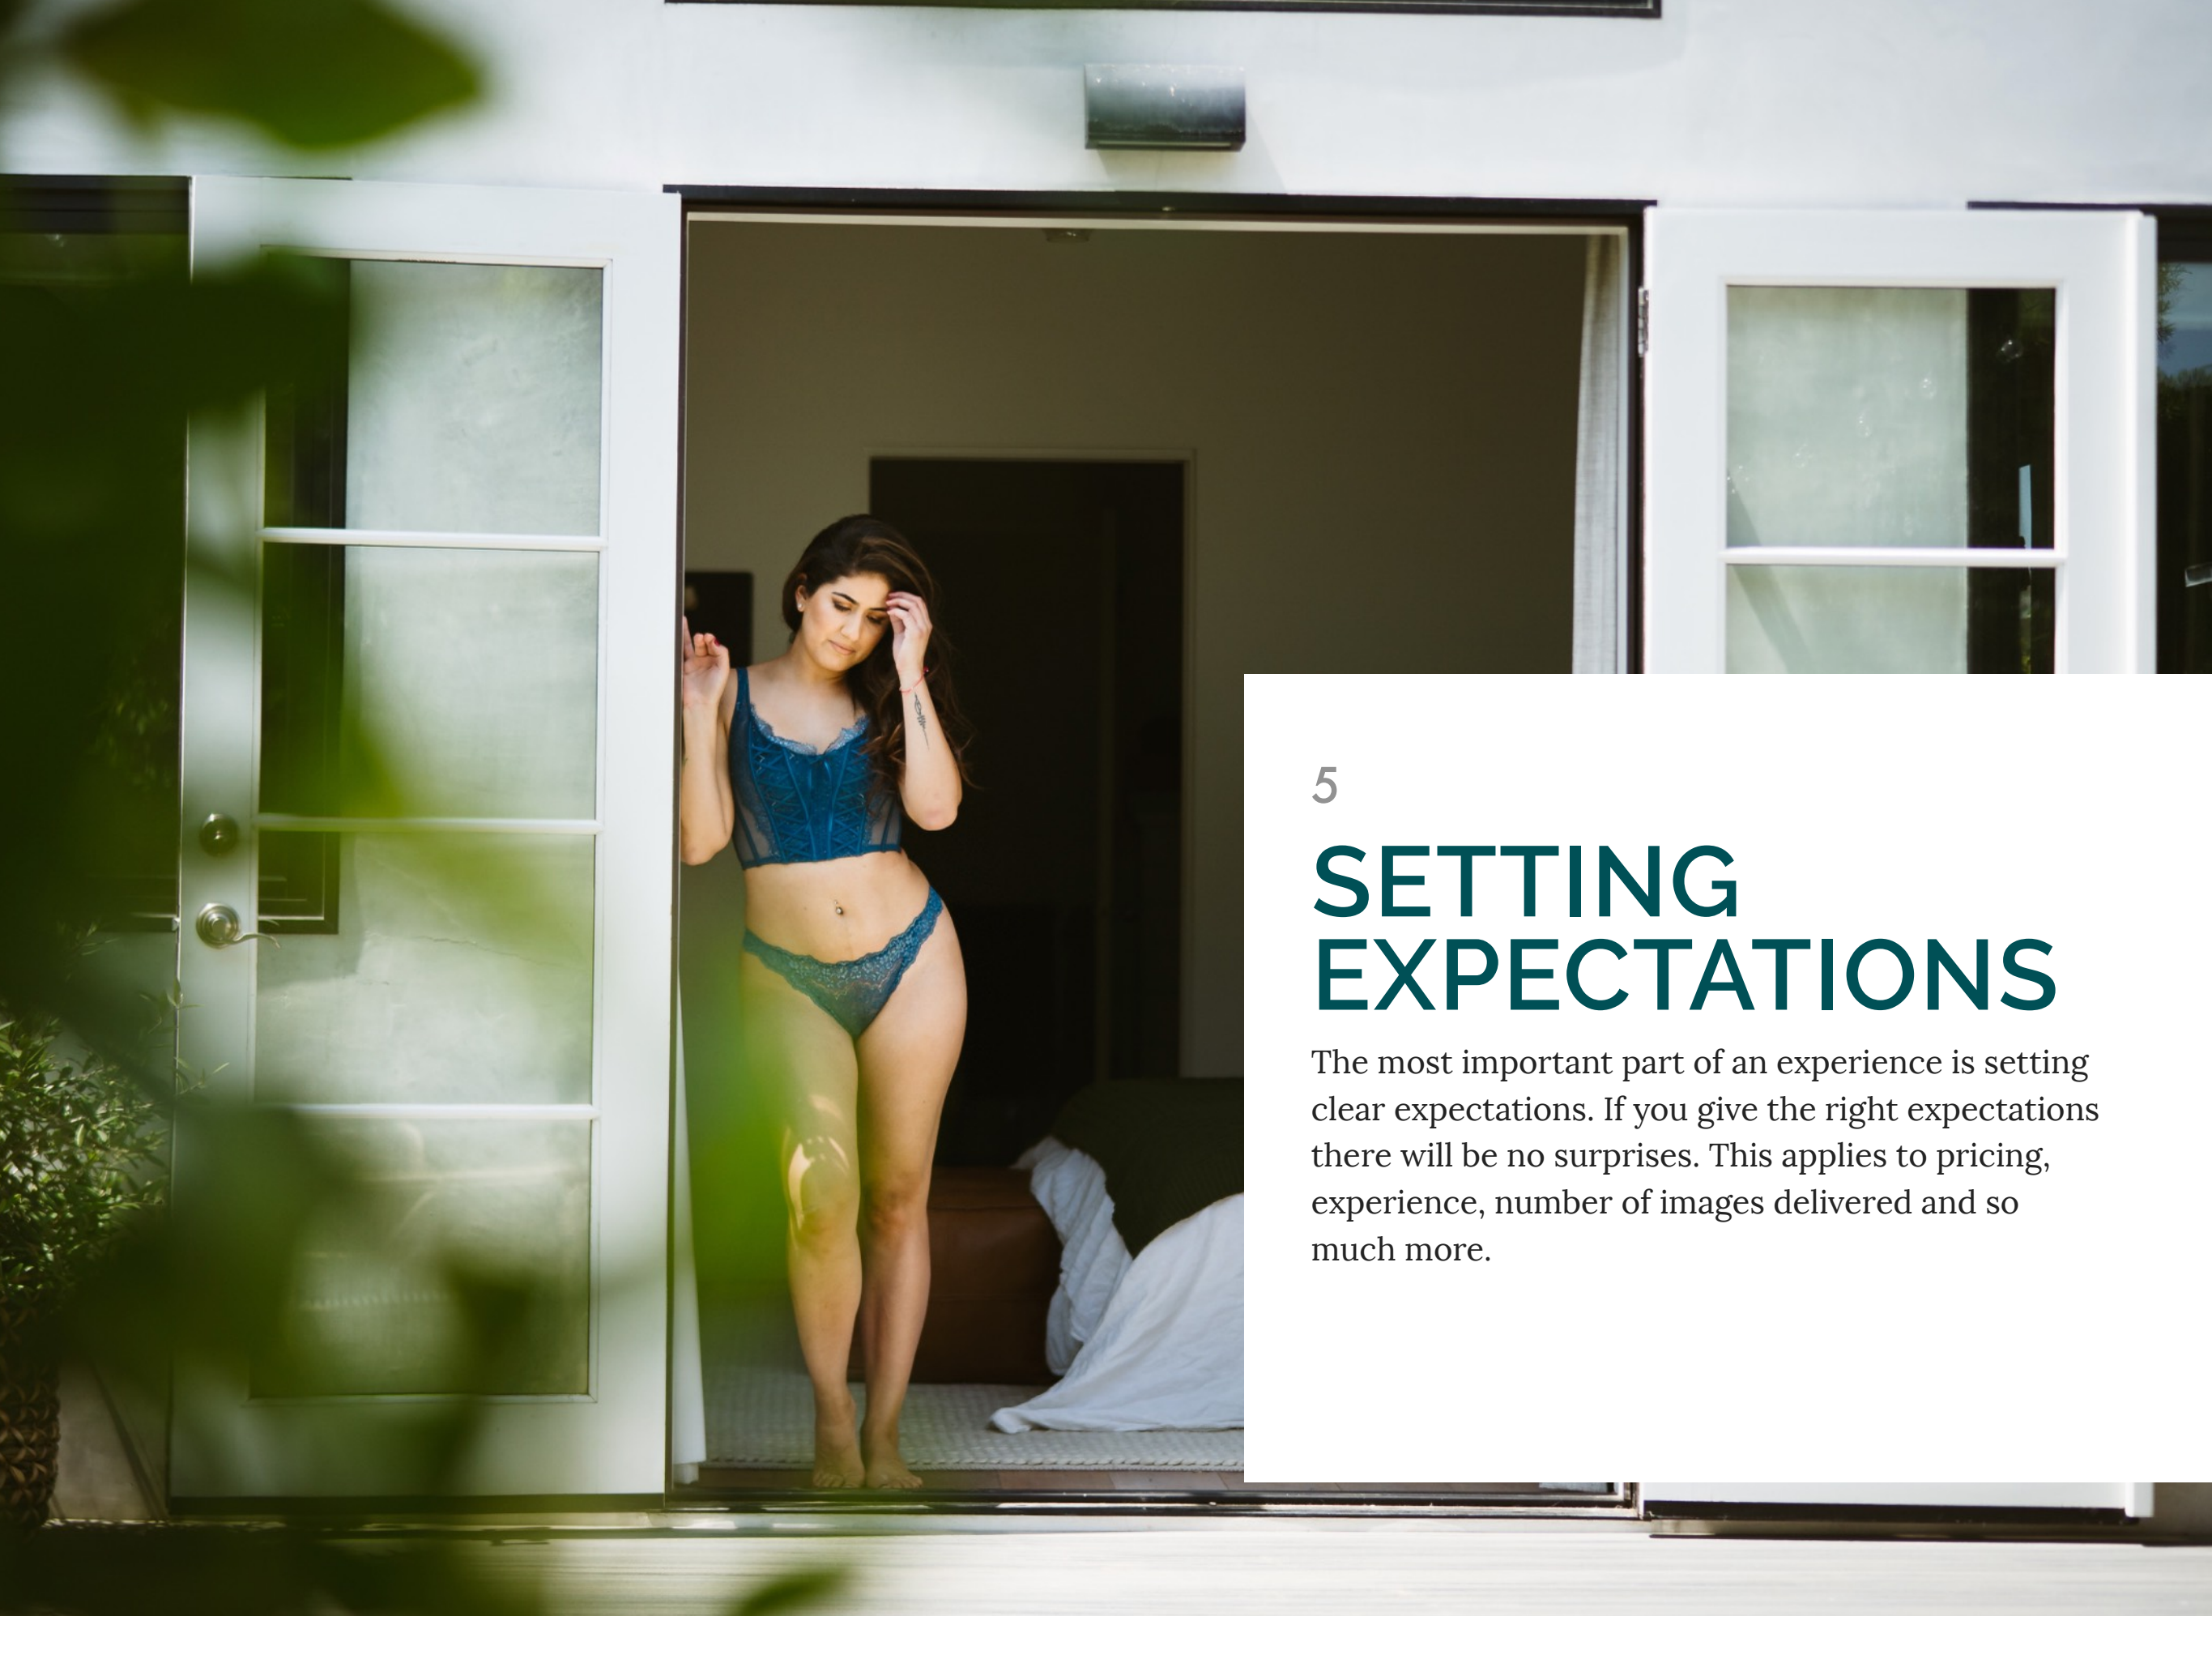

1. It shows that with no Photoshop, they look amazing.
2. It is a moment where the both of you accomplished something together.
3. They know to the rest of the photos will be great, instead of having a lingering uncertainty through the experience.
4. Their doubt of not being pretty enough for these kinds of pictures goes out the window, and their demeanor starts to change from nervous to confident, which can really be seen in the pictures.

9 times out of 10 they say something like “Wow, I don’t even look that bad!” or “Holy crap, I look great!” Now you have their trust, they are comfortable, and they are excited to get amazing pictures.

I can pose almost any body type to create a sexy image. If the clients face says “Is this really going to be sexy?” It ruins the whole photo. After seeing sample pictures on the back, they think “Oh yea, I’m sexy!”

I’ve started to show much fewer pictures on the back of the camera as I go because I want the big reveal during their ordering session to be exciting as possible. It can be less exciting if they have seen most of the pictures already.

5

SETTING EXPECTATIONS

The most important part of an experience is setting clear expectations. If you give the right expectations there will be no surprises. This applies to pricing, experience, number of images delivered and so much more.

SETTING EXPECTATIONS

There are going to be times when you need to fix her hair, fix her clothes or move her hand. At the very beginning of the shoot I walk them through how I'm going to pose them. It goes something like this.

- We are going to play the mirror game! We played this as kids. Pretend you are looking in a mirror and when I change something you change the same thing. acts out funny poses
- Sometimes I'll hop in the pose first! I'll show you how I want you to pose and then you can replicate it. Don't laugh too hard when I do!
- I'm pretty good with my words, but sometimes I just won't be able to explain exactly what I want you to do, so I'll just move an arm or a leg or fix your hair. Is that okay?

This creates the expectation that you are going to at some point touch her, and when that happens, she won't be shocked or uncomfortable. If you want, you can add an extra level before you fix her hair or a tag and say

- "I'm going to fix your tag, is that okay?" "
- "I'm having a hard time explaining how I want your hand to be positioned, can I move it around?"

9 times out of 10 they say absolutely and are even thankful that the pictures will be their best, instead of them trying to figure out what you are asking. Very rarely I will have someone say, "I'll get the tag" or something similar.

When fixing something, be quick and don't linger. Make it the same act as if you are picking up a piece of trash, or fixing a friend's collar on his shirt. The less you treat the situation like they are in underwear, the more normal it will seem.

Let them know what you're shooting before you shoot it.

I used to have a hard time with butt shots because I felt like I was invading their space to get the angle that I really needed for the perfect shot. I was sacrificing the quality of the shot for my own comfort. Then I started setting an expectation.

"I'm going to put you in one pose, and then walk around and get a few angles to make sure we get great variety for the album. This will include some close up shots of details like your hip bones or butt."

Now she knows the intention, and will be happy to see that you got the best butt shot possible, instead of either making things uncomfortable or giving her a below average image.

COMPLIMENTING

This is an interesting topic. I compliment a good amount. I want them to know the pictures are great, they look amazing and that they are doing a great job. I never make any sexual compliments. Female photographers have more leeway on the things they can say in this situation. While a woman could say “Damn girl, your booty looks hot!” I would likely show the picture and say “This picture of you is amazing!”

I’ve found that in this situation, overly flattering builds confidence and the more confident they feel, the more confidence will show through in their photos.

HOW I GET THEM TO PUSH OUTSIDE THEIR COMFORT ZONE

When I first started shooting boudoir, I was SO nervous asking them to even take off their shirt so we could shoot in her bra and underwear. I know they felt that tension too, which made it awkward. My nervousness made them uncomfortable. It was a vicious cycle. When you confidently ask them to do a sexier pose, or for them to take off an item of clothing, they will trust you.

I decided that I needed to have my own boudoir experience to understand what women go through when they are in their underwear being photographed by a stranger, in a house/hotel they have never been before.

I had a female photographer shoot it. It was her first time shooting a man in this way. I could tell that she was nervous about asking me to shed clothing, just like I was when I first started. I was ready to push my comfort zone, but didn't want to be the one to say "Can I take off my pants now?"

Women hired you for a boudoir experience. If they trust you they will not only follow your direction, but thank you for taking control and being the expert that you are.

I send out a questionnaire with every client asking them the amount of nudity they think they will be comfortable with. Lingerie, implied, topless, fully nude.

This isn't set in stone. This is what they THINK they will be comfortable with before they walk in the door. I had one client who wasn't planning on taking off her bra, and then 45 minutes into the shoot she wasn't wearing anything.

The goal is to give them the best experience and the best portraits possible. Less clothes doesn't necessarily mean better photographs. The goal is to push them outside of their comfort zone so that when they look back at the photos they don't say "Dammit! I really wish I would have just gone for that last shot but I was just a little too scared at the time."

If a client can't fathom the idea of taking off her bra, my goal is to get her to unstrap it in the back but still leave it on.

If a client says she is comfortable doing only implied nude, my goal is to take one picture where her nipples show, and show her that picture. If she doesn't like it she doesn't have to order it. Usually, they are glad they pushed the envelope. This is an empowering experience, and giving them permission to be empowered is part of what makes it so great.

Asking Them to go One Step Further

Let's say it's time to get more variety and take some images where she isn't wearing a bra. Sometimes you can just say "Let's do a few without your bra." Especially if they have checked the box that says they want to do topless or implied photos. If they seem more shy, I show them a photo on the back of the camera with a pose where if they weren't wearing a bra, you still wouldn't be able to see their nipple. Then I tell them:

"Wow, you look amazing in this picture! I think it would be even more amazing if you weren't wearing a bra. You can see that even without it, nothing is showing, but the idea of it is so much sexier. Do you want to try it?"

The largest objection I have ever received is "I don't think I would be comfortable with that." Then I say, "No problem! Here is the next pose we are going to do." I will usually suggest one more time as we continue to build more comfort. If they go for it great. If they don't that is great too. I don't want them to regret not 'just going for it' because they were a little nervous in the moment.

Another thing to tell them: "I recommend to all of my clients to go outside of your comfort zone. This isn't something you are going to experience on a monthly basis. Clients never look back at their pictures and say "Oh man, I really wish I didn't look so sexy in those photos!" But I DO hear, "Oh man, I really wish I would have just gone for that pose, I can't believe that being just a little nervous stopped me from getting the picture I really wanted."

Reassure them that they don't have to buy every photo we take. We can try some sexier poses and more revealing shots and if she doesn't like them or thinks they are too revealing, then she doesn't have to order them.

6

AFTER THE SHOOT

Time for the ordering session! In person sales alone will increase your income. I cannot recommend it enough. At this point she comes back over to view her amazing portraits and purchase her albums, wall art and digital images.

THE SALES SESSION

Do your sales sessions IN PERSON. I guarantee you will increase your average sale per client. Mine easily doubled, and continues to grow. People need guidance, they need scarcity, (this is your only time to buy these pictures), they need someone there to reassure them of how amazing they look in pictures.

If you don't have TV, just use your computer. You want to do it at their house, that is fine too. Are they out of town? Share your screen using Google Hangouts or Skype. Please, please, don't just send them a gallery to choose from.

1. The Slideshow - I always start my sales sessions the exact same way, with a slideshow in Lightroom. Choose your 15-20 favorite images and put some music behind it. Clients were so emotionally moved by them. Remember, emotion equals sales.

2. Choosing Favorites - You might think it could feel awkward for the two of you to sit in a room alone with music playing while watching a slideshow of naked photos of her.

You are there to guide her through the choosing the pictures for her album. Some women know exactly what they want. I've found that most have no idea and will need a lot of help choosing.

First just click through one by one and have them put the ones they like, and the maybe's in the yes pile. If there are two they can't choose between, they might ask your advice.

“Which of those two do you think I should get?”

Again, I choose your words carefully here. I mostly give non physical compliments, however female photographers should be able to compliment without worry about this.

- You look so empowered in this shot
- I like this one better because I feel more of a connection. The other one you look a little detached.
- This is my favorite one from the whole session
- As soon as you walked out in this outfit, I knew we were going to have a lot of keepers!
- The way the highlight shows off your collar bones is so amazing.

By this time you should have built up enough trust things won't feel weird.

3. Album Design - Some people want to sell digitals, I want to sell albums. I found when I started using Smart Albums during the ordering session it was easier to up-sell more images. See the video for how to make all of this happen. There is coupon code for a discount in the “Upsell” video of this course.

Congrats on having an amazing sales session!

As you get better at these, your clients will continue to purchase higher packages. You should raise your prices little by little as this happens. You never want your average purchase to be your highest collection. You want it to be your middle collection. To learn more about this, watch the pricing video.

BEING A MALE BOUDOIR PHOTOGRAPHER

Have Lots of Video!

For men, it's SO important to use video to 'demystify' what your client's experience will be like. Show them that it is not strange at all to be in lingerie with a professional photographer in the room. Show them that you are professional in your coaching and confident in your posing skills. Show them that it will be a fun experience. Show them that OTHER women loved having the experience. People are very visual, and the idea of being naked in a room with another man makes their imagination run wild, unless you SHOW them the reality. You can do it yourself, but don't be afraid to hire someone to come film if necessary. Bottom line, SHOWING is better than telling.

When a Client is Unsure with You Being a Male:

I used to receive emails like this... Not as much now that I have built such a strong brand and put so much of myself on my website.

"Wow, I LOVE your work! I just want to be honest, I am a little nervous about you being a guy... Can you give me some more information?"

First of all, they are writing you because they WANT to shoot with you, they just need to be convinced that it will be a good experience and that they can trust you.

I find it is best to let them know their experience is the most important thing to you. My response is usually worded like this. "That is totally fine! Some women are nervous shooting with a male boudoir photographer, others prefer it. I can promise you that you will have a fun and professional experience! If you would be more comfortable having a woman I know of some great ones that I can recommend. Either way, let's get on the phone and I can answer any questions you have..."

Let's break this down

If you are willing to send them to another photographer it says three things about you.

- You are not desperate for work. You book plenty and don't need to photograph them.
- You want them to have the best boudoir experience possible. If that means a female photographer, you want to help them experience that. Doing what is best for the client instead of yourself can be rare to find with today's business practices.
- It's not important to you to see this woman naked, therefore you are not a creeper.

After hearing this they are usually put at ease, especially after the phone call. Sometimes they can ask if they can bring a friend. If they end up deciding to hire someone else, chances are it was for the best. The worst thing that can happen is you have a client that wasn't actually comfortable with a guy and then has a bad experience.

Bringing Friends

I tell them it is fine to bring a friend but make sure it is someone who is positive and encouraging.

- Some friends cheer you on and encourage you to get sexier photos. They will tell you how amazing you look!
- Some friends will make you uncomfortable and will cast judgment on the type of photos you are creating.
- Some friends can also be distracting and take the attention off of you.

I let them know that if their friend displays anything that will take away from getting the best experience or photos that I will ask their friend to leave or sit in the other room. As long as you set this expectation with the reasons listed above, they usually have no problems with it.

You can also offer to have your female makeup artist stick around during the shoot for touch ups. Only about 10% of my shoots has someone else present other than the client and I, and it hasn't been an issue yet.

If you are really feeling good, you can try to book their friend as well. Offer to have her friend be photographed second at no extra charge, just purchase the albums/products separately.

Complimenting

The main thing with compliments is to give compliments that don't have anything to do with their body. It's about the light, their confidence, the looks they live, the outfit they brought. Boudoir isn't specifically about bodies, it's about the way we feel about them. Here are some good examples.

"Wow, your hair looks amazing all messed up like that!"

"It's funny because you have this really sweet smile, but then all of a sudden you get fierce! We are going to have such great variety for your album."

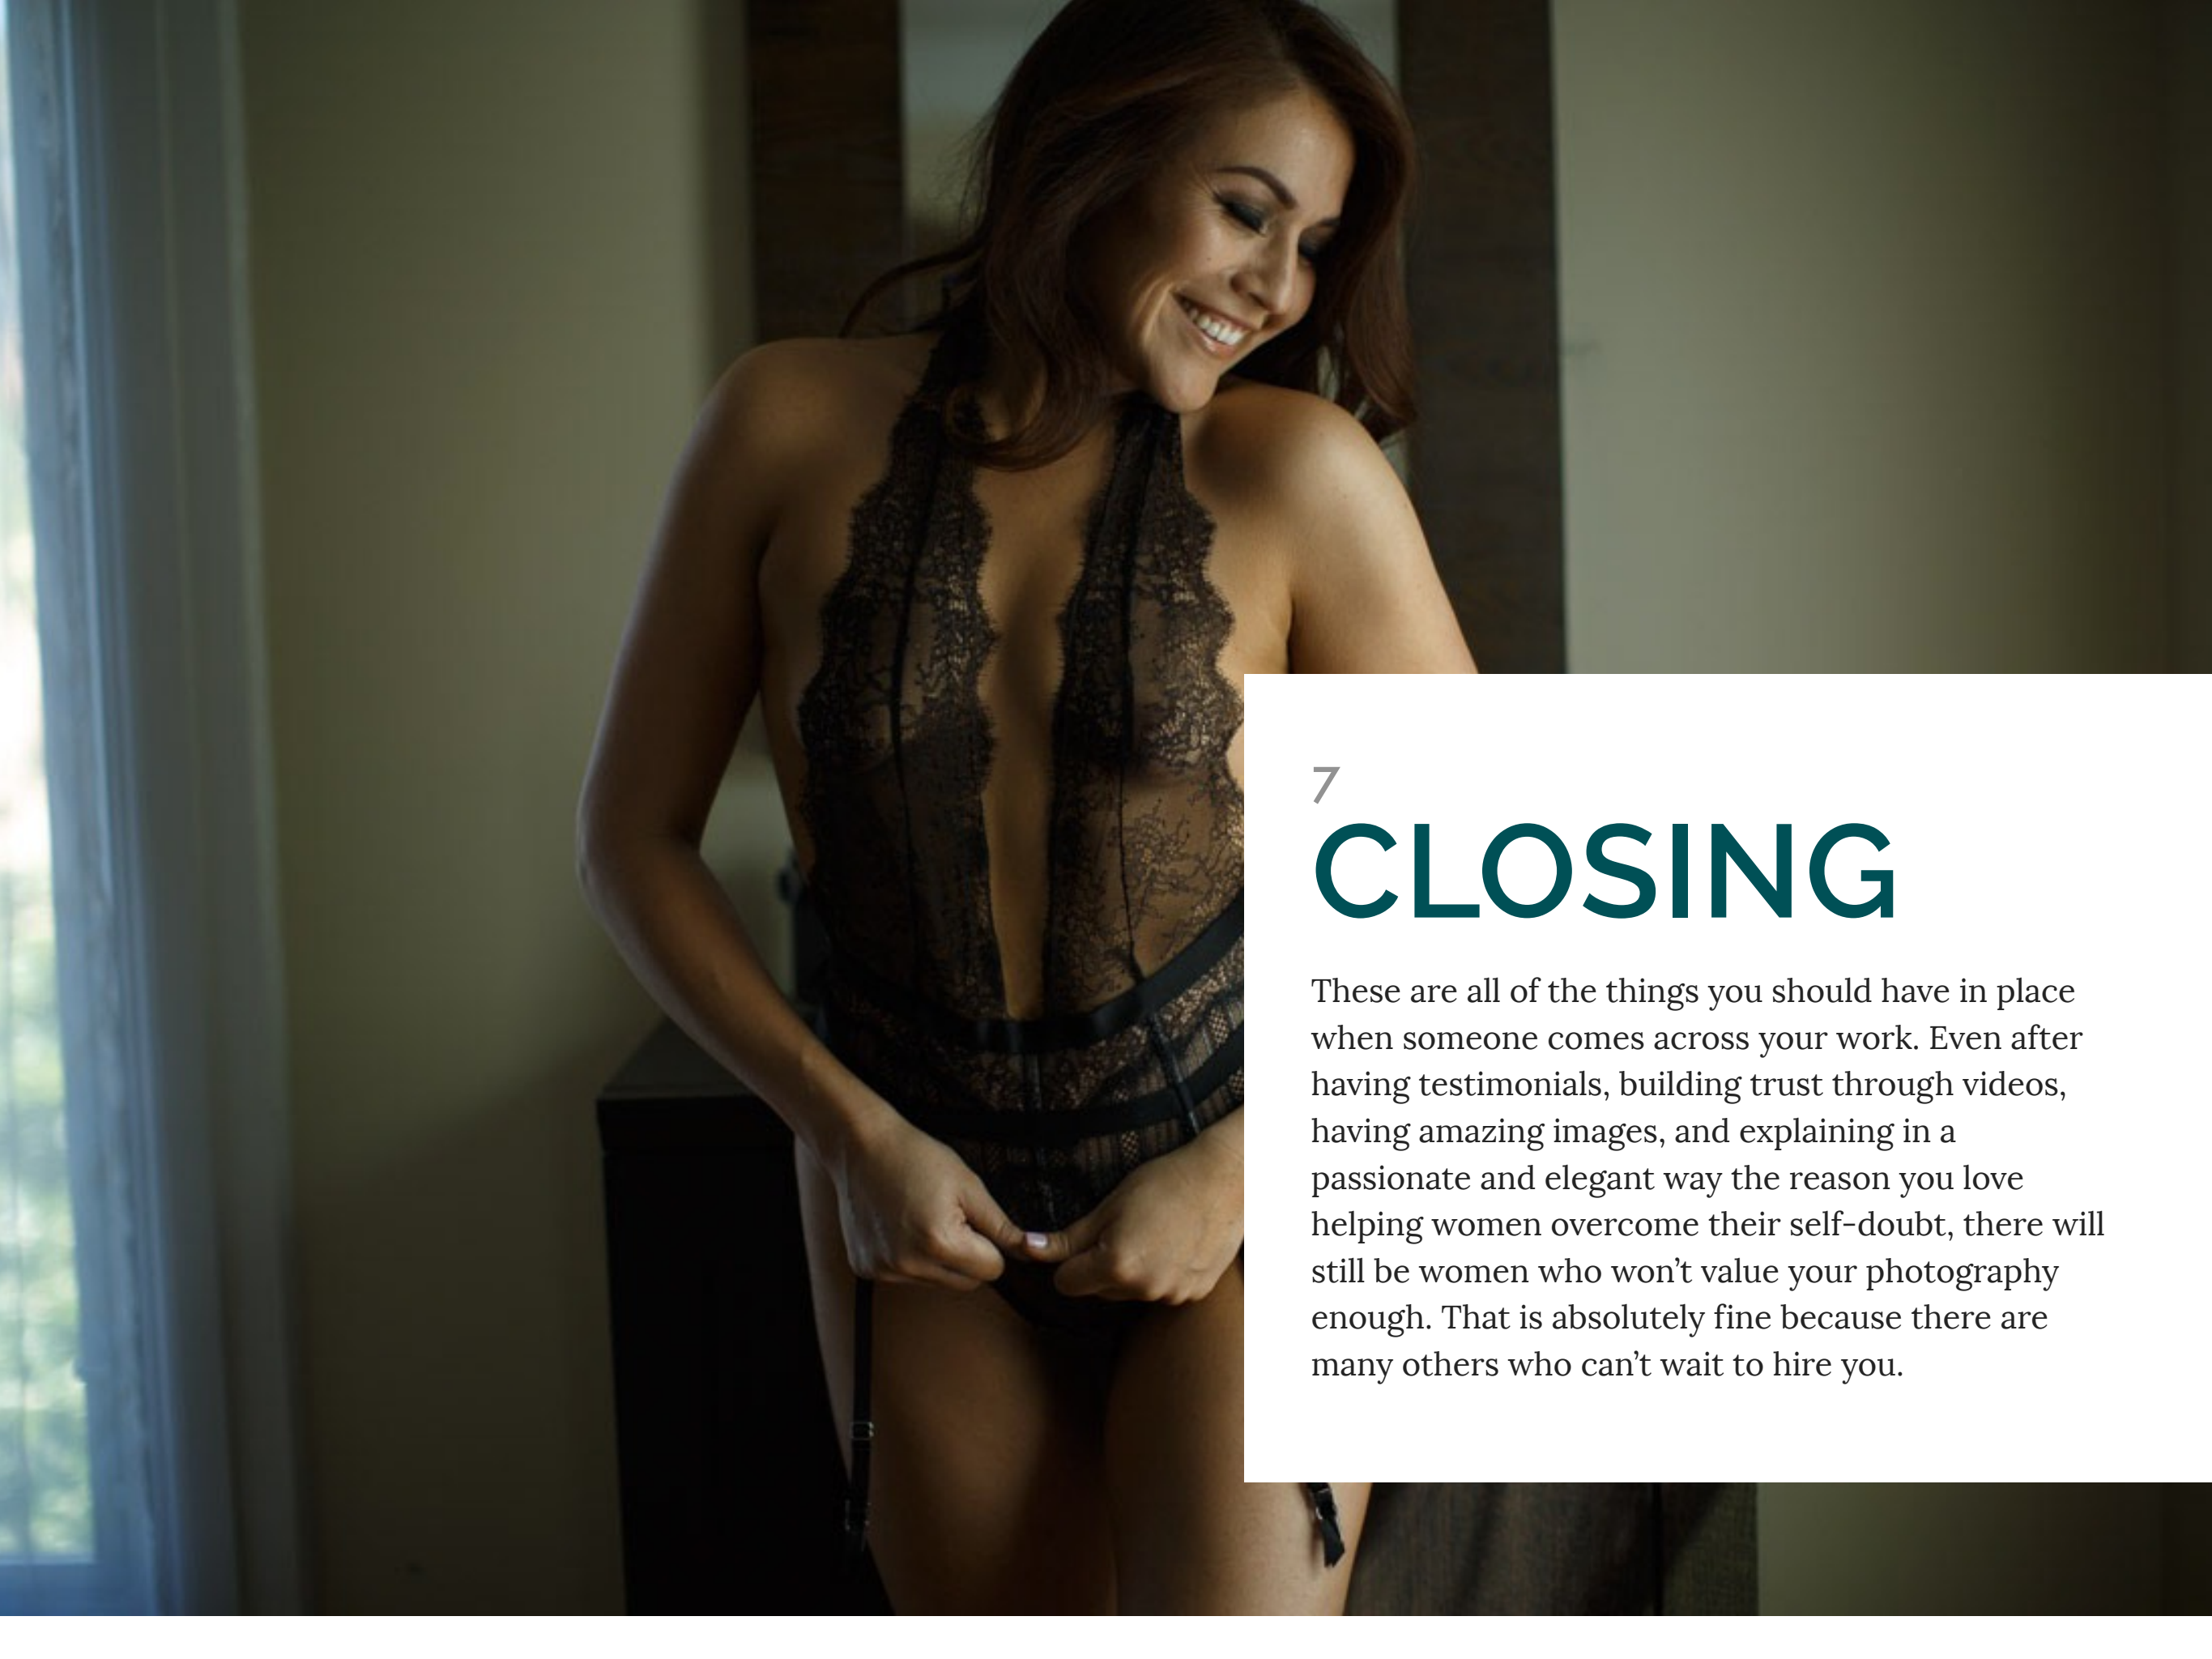

"You are so tall! That means we can photograph different poses with you that I can't with other women. Your pictures will be completely unique!"

"These are some of my favorite photographs that I have taken"

"A++ On these outfits you brought, I feel so creative with them."

"These are going to be your favorites! The way the light is hitting you right now is magical!"

These are great ways to give them a boost of confidence without making them feel as if you are hitting on them.

7 CLOSING

These are all of the things you should have in place when someone comes across your work. Even after having testimonials, building trust through videos, having amazing images, and explaining in a passionate and elegant way the reason you love helping women overcome their self-doubt, there will still be women who won't value your photography enough. That is absolutely fine because there are many others who can't wait to hire you.